New Music USA announces three new additions to its Board of Directors

Ethnomusicologist Aja Burrell Wood, financial advisor Susan Wegleitner, and conductor Joseph Young assume new roles on the New Music USA Board of Directors, extending the organization's national reach.

New York, NY (October 21, 2020) – New Music USA announces three new appointments to its Board of Directors: Aja Burrell Wood, Susan Wegleitner, and Joseph Young. This follows the recent appointment of Co-Chairs Reena Esmail and Joe Walker, as announced this June and highlights the ongoing development of this national organization under new leadership.

Aja Burrell Wood brings the New Music USA Board of Directors a strong academic and arts presenting perspective on jazz, ethnomusicology, and gender justice. Susan Wegleitner, who is the Board Treasurer for LA’s The Music Center, will enrich the board through her bi-coastal background in business and finance. Joseph Young’s experience as a conductor and music director will help New Music USA stay rooted in new music performance and programming.

Vanessa Reed, President and CEO, says,

“We are thrilled to welcome three new directors to our board, and to bring their strong ideas and perspectives into our conversation. In every decision we make at New Music USA, we strive to promote a thriving, equitable ecosystem for new music in all its compelling forms. Aja, Sue, and Joseph’s varied experiences – across different US states, music genres, and professions – broaden the expertise within our national organization, and support us as we plan exciting new programs under our new strategic plan.”
Aja Burrell Wood, incoming board member, says,

“In the US, we have yet to fully value, affirm, support, and celebrate all the richness and deep diversity there has long been in our music. To me, that means we have yet to hear, listen for, understand, and support all the brilliance, genius, and beauty our music has to offer. I am thrilled to join the New Music USA Board of Directors – so that I can contribute to meaningful, sustainable support of today and tomorrow’s music creators, representative and reflective of our many communities, facets of life, and ultimately ourselves."

Incoming board member Sue Wegleitner says,

"I am delighted to have this opportunity to join a team of dedicated professionals with a passion for supporting the creation of new music. Now, more than ever we need to support musicians who inspire us to rise and overcome the many challenges we face today."

Joseph Young, the third incoming board member, tells us,

"During this very significant time in our musical history, I hope to offer my diverse perspectives as an educator and music director while New Music USA continues to look at new areas for growth. I have always admired the organization for its innovative programming for all new music genres and I’m honored to join the board."
